SOCIAL AFFAIRS IN ENGLAND. (Written expressly for the Sydney Morning Herald.)

Endough And the Cattle Planue.—These are the twin subjects which have engaged the attention of the English propile during the past month. It is in vain that any other topic—no matter how interesting—is broathed. An alarmist telegram from Dublin or a fresh batch of statistics relating to the cattle plague, are certain to be forthcoming; and straightway we begin conversing about "head centres." "brotherhoods" and other portions of the Fenian jargon: or else discuss the feasibility of "stamping out" &c. the murrain, or the failure or success of the last new specific,—that of Mr. Worms. In fact, the cattle plague has become a really serious afair. The number of seizures during the past week being no less than 13,001, being an increase of 1400 on the number of the week previous. As usual in such cases, the alarm of the cattle breeders has swollen into a panic, and in their frenzied terror they have been giving us a practical fllustration of the classic fable in which the teamster is represented as appealing to Jupiter to assist him in getting his cart out of the rut, instead of putting his shoulders to the wheel himself. They appear inclined to rely more upon the assistance of Government than on their own endeavours, and have raised the cry of "compensation," such compensation to be defrayed by the country, which, in that case, would have to bear the burden in a twofold shape—paying the agriculturists for the loss of their cattle, and at the same time paying the increased prices occasioned by the diminished stock of animal food. The very absurdity of this proposal has, however, shamed so many of its advocates, that—for very decency—they have been compelled to modify their demand, and to ask compensation only for those animals which are slaughtered by orders of the cattle inspectors. This is fair and reasonable enough, and the Government accordingly prepared a bill on the subject, another bill being tended to the desired to the desired to the desired to the desired upon them with such extreme inequality. What the Government ought to be called upon to do was to give support to the principle of mutual assurance. But this bill did the very contrary. It compensated a class for the results of a calamity of which in reality they had only to bear a share; while it did not equalise the incidence of the burden upon that class, insamuch as that portion of the agricultural community who had not suffered most would not have to pay a great deal. Let him remind the House, the sratocracy should have the feelings of an aristocracy; and, inasmuch as they had the highest honours, they should bear the brunt of the inconvenience. That was the justification put forward for all privileged classes, although he was not aware of any aristocracy in history which had fulfilled/these acknowledged requirements. Of course all the little men of the House were eager to show off their mettle against the great political economist, with whose arguments they made rare fun, insocrate that the next morning several of the daily papers declared John Stuart Mill to be a complete parliamentary failure. Now, mark how superfluial was that judgment. On the evening of that very day, Mr. Gladstone rose in his place in the House of Commons and gravely stated that Mr. Mill had hit the one vital blot in the Government bill, and that in deference to his suggestion the Ministry had consented to reduce the amount of compensation. Here was a faire; nay, more, that he was a success, although not in the usual acceptation of that term. But there was a champion coming to the rescue. Mr. Lowe had undertaken to put down Mr. Mill, and it was not long before he found, as he imagined, his opportunity. With a sarcastic smile playing on his lips, and a twinkle of multiple market of the terms and apparently unrared the formal course of the London in the Government bill, and chart and a triple of the courty party exploded in uproarious laughter. Encouraged by this, Mr. Lowe ware dolder, and ventured upon Mr. Mill, and it was not long bef in the face of the specificne which is enting there incre on anomaly which provided the absorption relations on anomaly which provided the absorption relationship of the control of the c If working extra hours, using their own peculiar tools, and employing their own special skill, they take such a contract. I hold it to be mere folly to call it in the nature of an allowance or perquisite to them. Again, with regard to turnip-haeing, harvest work, and other piece work, the men contract to do so nauch of it at a certain price. It is true they earn large wages for the time; but, as they give more hours to a day, they in reality wark some eight days to one Sabbath. Measuring the money earned by these days, will bring their real wages back to the original scale; and we must bear in mind that at piece work the men lose by wet days. They have also, by this strain on their powers of endurance, taxed them to the fullest, and not only caused more wear and tear of clothing, but needed a greater expenditure for food. After controverting other details of the Earl's letter, the reverend writer concludes by stating that matters are mending. Wages must rise, for there is a call for labour elsewhere, which will soon lower our supply of able men to a degree which will make it a matter of necessity to pay them and lodge them better. There must be more cottages built, for the farms cannot be worked without them. Agitation has done its work. It forced into light the foul abuses of old days. Modern farming in the persons of the modern tenantry, can now fight its own battle. I rely no longer on sentiment or philanthropy; I am content to abide the action of what I see around me. The ruin of the landlord and the tenant are alike involved in the question how far land can be cultivated to a profit by a population giving only weak, discontented labour, in return for low wage, eked out by prequisites, housed insufficiently, often tired with travel before they commence their first hour's work. As for the Utopia of Lord Shafesbury, I am alice rior edulous that it represents the real condition of any one county in England; I should, indeed, rejoice if it was snything like a true picture of one tenth of Dorsetshire."

rejoice if it was anything like a true picture of one-tenth of Dorsetshire."

But the matter did not end here. The Spectator published two communications, which it vouched as being the bone fide productions of the Dorsetshire labourers. In these letters the men told their story in simple and earnest language, their statements being in direct contradiction to those of the Earl of Shaftesbury; and, although the Times has lent the weight of its authority to the side of the Earl, it is pretty clear that the condition of the Dorsetshire labourers is as miserable and deplorable as originally represented by the friends of John Cross. Meanwhile, what is the remedy. I unhesitatingly reply "Bmigration." It is of no use to censure the landowners for not giving a higher rate of wages. There is too much computition in the labour market to admit of this. Neither can we expect that many of the labourers should become a common fund to be subscribed by them, or out of dividends and bonuses accruing to them. 3. That these resolutions be printed and circulated amongst the workpeople, with a cordial appeal to them to co-operate in promoting the welfare of the establish-ment of which they form a part." So far as can be at present ascertained, these partnerships of industry have been found to work well, and promise to be-come at mo distant period, an essential feature of British industrial life.

have been found to work well, and promise to become at no distant period, an essential feature of British industrial life.

Ever since Mr. James Greenwood published in the Pail Mall Gazette his experience, as an amateur "casual," in Lambeth Workhouse, we have suffered from an inundation of "casual" literature; in the same way that the success of H. H. Ainsworth's "Jack Sheppard," and "Rookwood," some years ago, led to the formation of that school of thieves literature which has in its time worked so much evil, and from the presence of which we are not yet wholly free. If the publication of the morbid natratives now so common of workhouse life were in the least calculated to effect any good, I should be the last to utter a word against it, but it is merely a new phase of that sensationalism which has of late become an almost indispensable portion of our existence, and, as such, it is likely to retard rather than to accelerate the adoption of ameliorative measures. The "casual" vagrant, and ragamulin as he generally is, has been elevated to the dignity of a hero. His adventures form the burden of popular songs, and have even found their way to the stage, more than one theatre having engaged a real "casual" for the purpose of keeping up the intensely realistic routine in which dramas are got up now-a-days. All this is an instructive illustration of the popular tendency to rush into extremes. The casual must have his day, and share with the cattle plague, Fenianism, and the movemen's of the Prince of Wales, the dubious honour of furnishing the staple food for town talk. Well will the if all this does not diagust those who have long by "sensation" narratives that the evils which afflict them are to be removed. We must discover the cause before venturing to do a way with the effect. The treatment approaching to do savy with the effect in the testment approaching to harshness would be both unjust and cruse! to those whom unforceseen circumstances, accident, or affliction have driven to seek a right's shelter in a work sheeted to the voices branches of manufacturing trily previous them from plaining their feet higher and the control of the con declares that five per cent. upon an investment of sixtreen shillings in the astraign bank is the only third required to make her supremely happy. It would not pay for her gloves:

Far more practical is the almost Royal munificence—if rulers ever have been as munificent—of Mr. Peabody, who has just added another sum, amounting to no less than one hundred tho usand pounds, to for providing the labouring classes of London with the sum total is enough to stagger one. Quarier of million sterieng, in hard cash and securities, is a fortime which a peer might envy. It is to be hoped that it will be expended wisely and in strict accordance with Mr. Peabody's desires, as expressed by him in a licter accompanying the gift. The present was not nade a moment too soon. The railway companies a still at their work of der ruction amongst the dwellings of the metropolitan working classes, and the amount of overcrowding thereby occasioned hareached such an extent as to concelling to tion to those by whom she was surrounded. During their short stay in this country they made many friends, and there are many who deeply and truly mourn their loss."

In a postscript he adds that since he had written the above, he had heard "that Mrs. Draper, a short time before the small boat left the vessel, handed her rug to some of the sailors to help to keep them warm. If this be so, it is an extraordinary evidence of her thoughtful care for the comfort of others, quite in accordance with her general character." Respecting Dr. Woolley, Macmillon's Magazine pays him a well deserved tribute, which I trust will appear in extense in the columns of the Sydney Morning Headd. It was written by one who knew him well, and hacrested no small degree of sympath for the unfortunate family thus deprived of their head and protector.

The official inquiry into the cause of the loss of the ill-fatted vessel has not been productive of any important results. There was the usual evidence to prove that nothing was amiss, and so forth, but as the witnesses were not allowed to be cross-examined, the public soon lost all faith in the proceedings. Among those examined was Master Edwards, one of the midshipmen of the London. A portion of his evidence was extremely touching, especially when he described the last scene on board, and more than one of the hardy seafaring men present found their eyes become moust and their stalwart frames tremble as he spoke with grave and earnest simplicity of the captain being overcrome by his feelings and bursting into tears. Those who were acquainted with Captain Martin will know from this how intense and terrible must have been the agony and despair which, for a moment, thus overcame him. I am sorry—nay, humilisted—in having to record that all, or nearly all of the survivors who so miraculously escaped the fate of their fellow-creames in the London, have, during the last few creatures in the London, have, during the last few creatings, been exhibiting themselves on the boards of several of the East

VICTORIA.

In Wonga Wonga steamer brings Melbourne papers to the 16th instant.

The Argus of that date states that there is reason to hope, as we have already stated, that the dispute between the two Houses will be brought to an end, inasmuch as two out of the three objectionable points in the Supply Bill will be conceded by the Assembly, namely, the form of the preamble, and the clause limiting the duration of the bill. In regard to the third point, it is probable that the Council will not insist upon their objections to the inclusion of the repeal of the gold duty in the Bill of Supply, in consequence of an assurance given by the committee of the Assembly engaged in the late conference, that it was inserted in the bill as a tax and not as pertaining to territorial revenue; and also, because of a disclaimer on the part of the Assembly of any intention of tacking one with the other, with the view of coercing the Council to pass the measure submitted. Chiefly, we imagine, on secount of the compromise likely to be effected between the two Houses, there will, we believe, be a change in the personnel of the Cabinet, if not an entire change of Administration.

The same paper mentions that the movement recently set on foot with the object of presenting a substantial testimonial to the Hon. J. O'Shanassy prior to his departure from the colony has met with very cordial support in all quarters.

The dry weather (says the Argus) seems at last to have broken up. On Saturday the atmosphere was cloudy, and now and then a few drops of rain fell. Towards night the clouds began to thicken, and a gentle rain set in about 6 o'clock, and continued throughout the night until about mid-day on Sunday. The wind was then light from the north-east, and the weather cleared for an hour or two. About 4 o'clock the wind came in from the westward, driving up banks of heavy clouds, and a light but steady rain followed, which, we hope, has not been partial, but has extended all over the country, where it is so much wanted.

Mr. Ramsbottom has arrived in Melbourne from Hobart Town, to await the appearance of the Lincolnshire, which has on board the salmon ova.

in the swamp for the last week or nine days, and we understand, from it e peat-like nature and dryness of the soil, all attempts to extinguish it have been unsvailing.

The Orens and Murray Advertiser has the following:

—The other day a German farmer named Rushl arrived in Beechworth from Docker's Plains, in pursuit of his wife, who eloped from his house on Monday last with a timsmith named George Daniels, well known about Estcourt and Oxley. The faithless woman has left no children, but the circumstances attending her departure inflict a very serious loss upon her husband, as she managed to possess herself of the whole proceeds of his last crop, amounting to nearly $130, and this prize is believed to have been handed over to the guilty Lothario. Neither of the fugitives can plead youth as an excusse.

The Deplesford Mercury says:—During the hearing of a case in the Police Court on Saturday, an Italian witness created no small amount of amusement by a very ingenious answer he gave to a barrister who was examining him. The witness was saked whether he perfectly understood English, when he frankly answered, "I don't understand it well, but can speak it much." The answer was perfectly satisfactory.

The uninitiated have sometimes been puzzled by the sannouncement of a pedestrian "walking 1000 miles in 1000 hours," but what (saks the Geelong Register) will be thought of 238 hours' consecutive attendance upon a sick man, during which no time was allowed to eat, to sleep, to write, to weep, to wash, or even to take snuff, but one hard long 238 hours, or twelve nights and days of unceasing vigil, without a break, at the low charge of "a shilling an hour." Such was the nature of a claim preferred, and attempted to be substantiated, at the Geelong Police Court, but which was scouted by the Bench as grossly absurd and unreasonable.

The Orens and Murray Advertiser has been shown by Mr. Spearing a monster fowl's egg, which was found in the hen-house of Mr. Pisher, of the Commercial Hotel, Beechworth. It weighs very close

The Doo Show at Orelong—The Argus corrependent reports that the Erst dog show ever held in Geelong took place on the 13th instant, in the large room at Southey's Hotel, and was in every respect successful. Nearly one hundred dogs were exhibited and amongst them were several animals that would not have diagraced the very best shows ever held in the old country. The hrrangements were unexeqtional, and the awards, except in one instance, satifactory. Out of thirty-one classes of dogs expected to compete, only seven were not well represented, whilst in many classes the exhibits by far exceeded the expectations of the committee. In one case, viz., bull and bull terrier, the judges judiciously divided the dogs into two classes,
viz., those over and under wenty pounds weight, giving a prize in each case. Many dogs were noticeable for their pure breed, beauty of form, and general excellence. Among the best was a pointer, shown by Mr. John Whitchouse, of Hallarat; and as imposted setter, shown by Mr. Rowlands, of Ballarat, is spaniels the exhibits showed much merit, and they formed a prominent feature in the show. Mr. Banner, of Sandridge, showed a fine and numerous stud of about a dozen dogs of the bull, bull-terrier, and terrier breeds, and carried off several prizes; but for large dogs of this breed nothing could compare with dogs shown by Mr. Jeffery, of Geelong, and Mr. Cramptes, of Ballarat, and it would be difficult to find their equals.
Mr. Quincy showed two most beautiful pups in this class, which met with general admiration. Mrs.
Whatmough, of Queenscliff, won the first prize for leasing revolunda, with a most beautiful little slat with two pups. The rooms were visited by a targe number of gentlemen, and the fair sox showed ther

THE WEST COAST CAMPAION.

Attand papers to the 4th instant are to hand.

Writing to the Daily Southern Cross, on the 56th ultimo, from camp, Waingongoro, the special correspondent of that paper says:

For the last three days and nights we have been expecting to be attacked by the rebels here. The necessary precautions have been taken by Captain Dawson, commanding the station, to resist the hossile visit. Up to the present the rebels have not shown any bold front near either of the camps here. The intelligence of the intentions of the rebels was conveyed to us by the friendly Maories belonging to the friendly chief Wiremu. Due attention has been paid to render everything in a proper defensive state. We have a 12-pounder Armstrong gun, which would know that the said there are about 600 fighting rebels in the bush opposite to this post, including about 200 as a reinforcement lately arrived from the Wares district. One of the cavalry sentries, posted on a rising ground about a mile from camp, saw to-days lot of srmed natives between his post and the bush it is supposed they were on the look-out for a mall unarmed party of pakehas, to indulge in their muderous propensities.

The redoubts were rather weakly garrisoned, and if they were reinforced, so that 700 men could turn out in each camp in case of an attack, it would be a great matter. At present they are far short of the number.

As an escort of eleven troopers of the Military Train were galloping along from here to Manumpa, on the 23rd, and when approaching a place called the lound Bush, they saw about thirty natives some distance from the road. The troopers prepared for action, but the rebels alunk off into the bush, and we saw no more of them.

OPOTIKI.

We have news (says the same paper) from Opothis to Friday last, on which day Colonel Lyons had arrived, and received a letter from the natives relative to the anticipated arrest of the rebel Kereopa. It is of course impossible to state whether the natives may be sincere or not in their promise to do their best to capture Kereopa, but we give their letter for what is a worth:

"Tunanui, March 26, 1966,

"To Opotiki: to the Colonel. O friend, salutations to you, and our agreement. O friend, be still, we me working for Kereopa. Do not be anxious, be ealing let me do the work in these days: but when I sail you word that my work is done, it will be your time. After which I shall be down.—It is ended.

THE SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY ON OUR TRADE WITH THE BRITISH PROVINCES.

OUR TRADE WITH THE BRITISH PROVINCES.

(From the New York World, January 2.)

It is not surprising that, under the weight of the complex, difficult, and important questions of revenue and finance which press upon the mind of the Secretary of the Treasury, inadequate examination sheal have been given to subjects of comparatively mine but yet of great practical moment.

Industrious and persevering efforts have been make to sustain many errors in relation to the results of the Reciprocity Treaty. They were dishonourable bids for popularity through deceit, and are to be classed with the ignorant legislation to keep down the price of gold and the malignity evinced towards the South, being allike impolitie in practice and wrong in intention, made at a time when moderation and good-will were at a discount.

We have already shown how the present chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means pensisted in the most flagrant misrepresentations, indulging is vehement invective, and complaining that we wrotobed of our just rights, because some 3,50,185 dellars of specie were sent to Canada in one year; making a statement which, if true, would be of links importance, but suppressing the fact that it was never than counterbalanced by more than 5,000,000 dollars of specie imported to the United States in the same year through the district of Champlain slone.

The Solons or Isaac Newtons of the Agricultural Department of the Pasent Office have published the exports and imports of ceresla, fac., to saffrom Canada alone, for a limited period, ignoring the wider range of the subject, and perhaps really ignorant that the treaty included four other provinces, and forgetting this the supposed qualification by which they hold district the other range of the subject, and perhaps really ignorant that the treaty included four other provinces, and forgetting the cathes and farming implementar-subjects, certainly, do no little interest and value, and quite snough is exercise to the utmost the faculties of the pasent incumbent, but yet altoget

0,183,224 GOHAFF; and from 1866 to 1868, we sent the people of the provinces more cereals and the products by 360,474 dollars than we bought the them. There is a remarkable coincidents is the imports and exports of this class—the superbaving 67,821,752 dollars and the imports 67,181,311 dollars.

the imports and exports of this class—she supershaving 67,81,752 dollars and the imports 67,161,27 dollars.

"Our marketa," says the report of the Secretary of the Treasury, "have been strong, extensive, as valuable; theirs have been swall, limited, and over-reached, though carreely likely they would have made a series of bad trades for so many years it succession. The Secretary of the Treasury does as tate his reasons for his opinion, nor does he indeas us, as we learn from statistics published by substitute of the department over which he now presides, his up to a yet recent period our sales to them were 17.1,628,779 dollars, or 26,446,683 dollars more the purchased from them, which were 144, 183,096 dollar. He adds: "The people of the Canadas and the Provinces have been sellers and we buyers of the same productions for which we are often forced to seek iforcign market." The remark, true in itself, by so means justifies the conclusions which are drawn from the provinces have been sellers and we buyers of the same productions for which we are often forced to seek iforcign market." The remark, true in itself, by so means justifies the conclusions which are drawn from the province of the competition with us if we refuse them in France, England, the West Indies, and all other foreign markets. That, indeed is the fact on which his argument is based. It is a the fact on which his argument is based. It is a the fact on which his argument is based. It is sufficiently that the province of the province of the competition of the province of the

The Sydney Morning Berald.

FRIDAY, APRIL 20, 1866.

THERE are many important changes slowly but surely working out in the views of Englishmen in reference to their foreign relations and their colonial empire. Do they portend, as some imagine, the loss of authority, and finally of neminal dominion, or are they, as others hope the preparation for a long era of Imperial great ness, such as for centuries attended the rule of the Cæsars? It is useless—observes the Times, in a recent leader—to disguise the fact, that the army cannot be recruited by Englishmen. It is alleged that the old policy, in deed never dis-used, must be extended and methodised—the another. First of all it is proposed by these reasoners to leave the colonies to light their own of skill and gallantry, shown by the regular troops and their officers, but the general result of their movements led to the conclusion that they did not like their work or were unable to do it. The waste of time and life in New Zealand suggested a very painful apprehension to many, that, if the British soldier was not inferior to his predecessors, the world had outstripped him in provess, or that, far more probable, those by whom he was commanded had lost the idea how to turn it to account. It is satisfactory, doubtless, to those who have been impatient at the cost of this war, and who with some injustice have east on the colony the discredit of its lingering character, to see its risk, its burdens, and its honour devolved on the colonists. But in renouncing the task of military protection we see but the first step to the abandonment of empire. Colonists should not be seldiers except in renouncing the task of military protection we see but the first step to the abandonment of empire. Colonists should not be seldiers except upon a sudden emergency; but if they are forced to make war, they will settle the conditions of peace. It would be folly were the colonists to refuse the duties which when laid aside by the Supreme Government must be taken up by the people. It is, however, a great mistake to suppose that the weapons and tactics which may scour the bush and capture the savage will compare with the weapons and tactics which may scour the bush and capture the savage will compare with the discipline of a regular army in presence of a civilised enemy. The soldier of the Empire is trained in a different school, and most of the accomplishments of a "bushranger"—as cu-riously enough the New Zealand volunteers riously enough the New Zealand volunters sometimes call themselves—would be of small use, and sometimes dangerous to a grenadier. The regular army, while animated with a soldier's courage, has little to do but to obey instructions which can only be comprehended in their result.

Where then is the English regular to be

Where then is the English regular to be found?—This is the question. The cost of an army, if not a disreputable horde only to be controlled by iron discipline, must be in proportion to other occupations. Ireland, once a great recruiting ground, has so improved in many parts of the country that wages have doubled and trebled. To obtain the English soldiers who secont the shilling as an entrance into the who accept the shilling as an entrance into the profession upon deliberate choice must be impossible until they are better paid. There is indeed a great addition to the comforts of the army, and more attention to the women and children; but still to follow to the women and children; but still to follow the drum of a sergeant is nowhere deemed a sober thing. The conscription of France makes every man liable to serve, and the sys-tem of substitutes gives often a large income to an old soldier, who serves for a new term of service what the State exacts for exemptions. Those who are averse from a military life are, if they have some many released and the State if they have some means, released, and the State in their stead obtains a trained volunteer, ready for any field. The British system of promotion is improved, but no British private expects to rise above a certain grade. In France, both in law and in fact, it is possible, not improbable, that the rustic recruit may return with the sash of an officer on his aboutless.

up the arm; in view of the kind of service it has to perform. The Indian Empire, the of Africa, frighten off many who would rejoice greatly at the sight of the enemy. The miserable fate of a regiment which was almost destroyed in China a few months ago, shows what are the liabilities of the service as it is sometimes managed. Men may have no repugnance to march up to the cannon's mouth, but they would require great patriotism to be willing to pitch their tents in tropical rain on the borders of a grave yard where they had to bury the dead.

The nucleus of every army—its grand outline The nucleus of every army—its grand outline and animating spirit—mus: belong to the Imperial race, or its foreign forces will prove its betrayers and destroyers. The employment of one race to keep down another seems, however, incompatible with the lasting preservation of public liberty, for the force whier. weuld repress and control would be turned against freedom. A foreign battalion, far from its home, subject to its military chiefs, and having no wish but for good tary chiefs, and having no wish but for good pay in peace and pillage in war, would be pleased to coerce those who should cultivate or display

The spectacle of the British Empire is grand, for the force of mind and organisation which for the force of mind and organisation which held in obedience so many subject peoples. This has been of ephemeral growth almost within the life of man. England is in the number of ancient kingdoms, but is only recent in her imperial sway. Can her present military system hold what her soldiers against desperate odds have so recently conquered? That is the question which is now seriously occupying the minds of all nations, those who hate and those who wish us well. Meantime one fact is clear, that little will be done for the colonies hereafter. They must be their own defenders; they must pay for their own arms, or take the chances of a general war. own arms, or take the chances of a general war. When we read the various accounts of the incidents of the evil war, we are not only struck with the facility which various races and professions learned the business of the soldier, at the same time the awful calamity which resulted from the diffusion of this military spirit. Never was a civil strife so this military spirit. Never was a civil strile so sanguinary, never did war spread over so vast a theatre, and nowhere did it leave such moun-tains of dead. A great victory was achieved, but no mortal mind can foresee its consequence, or count its cost.

THE residents of the neighbourhood of Albury. who are petitioning the Government to allow colonial produce to pass freely across the Murray, make out a good prima facie case. There is no doubt that persons from Victoria have been allured across the frontier to settle down wine, tobacco, and other products, with a rational expectation of finding a market for their produce on the Victorian side of the river. This expectation is disappointed, the market is closed, and the investment of their capital is rendered largely unproductive. This change has been brought about by the action of the Government, and to the Government, erefore, it is natural that an appeal should lie for redress.

At the same time the real blame of the whole difficulty rests not with our Government, but with that of Victoria. It was with great reluctance, and after long delay, and only as a last resort, that the border duties were collected. The amount now being received, as indicated by the last quarter's returns, justifies the collection. It would not have been right to impose new taxes on the whole colony while revenue to the amount of £60,000 was being soldiers of one race must be used to control another. First of all it is proposed by these reasoners to leave the colonies to fight their own battles, as in the case of New Zealand where success against the native was never gained or assured until the Volunteer force and bush soldiers superseded the regulars, or modified their tactics. There are many examples, both of skill and gallantry, shown by the regular | cation—the Custom Houses would never have artien along the border. Even now any conciliatory overtures would be readily listened to. The Government has no wish for border duties, but it has a wish for its revenue, and it must and will have it. But we venture to say that there would be no stickling for a very rigid reckoning. The value of the border duties is now pretty well disclosed, and the basis for a good approximate calculation is laid. The trade is increasing every year as Riverina develops its capabilities, and the revenue will increase proportionally. But the Government would probably be willing to take the present year as a standard, and accept £60,000 a year for several years to come as a compensation, and withdraw the Custom House officers from the Border. An appeal, therefore, should be made to that Government to go to the root of the evil, as well as to ours, to diminish the evil. The residents on the Ovens gold-fields have good ground for complaint. They are losers as well as the Albury people— all commerce is reciprocal. If the growers suffer because their market is arbitrarily closed against them, those who buy in that market suffer also by the enhanced price of commodi-

It is to the interest, too, of the Melbourne merchants to make common cause with the consumers of Albury produce in the Ovens district. For the collection of duties on the border is a check to the trade of Melbourne with Riverina. The bonded stores admit of all goods that can be sent up in bond paying only one duty, but this does not apply to goods that cannot be bonded. All broken parcels, all goods that have been assorted in Melbourne have already paid duty in Victoria, and they have to pay duty again on entering New South Wales. So far, this double duty is a protection to the Sydney merchant, and a disability to the Victorian; and this would be felt more keenly than it is if our railway to Goulburn were open, and if it were not easier, as it unfortunately is, to get goods up quicker from Melbourne to Gundagai than it is to get them the same distance in the same time from Sydney to the same half-way place.

If the Government of Victoria remains

Sydney to the same half-way place.

If the Government of Victoria remains obdurate a the matter it will be for our Government to study how far it can meet the claim of the Albury residents, though the question is one of far wider compass than their petition represents it. They look at it as a purely local matter, but the Executive will have purely local matter, but the Executive will have to take a wider survey. They count up merely their own gains and losses, as it is natural for them to do; but the Ministry must look at it as a question of intercolonial policy and must study it in all its bearings.

The question at once arises, why should we give to one little district a special privilege? If free intercolonial trade is good for the people of Albury, why not for the colony generally? Why are we to have special laws for special localities? Why not have a broad and uniform policy? If the wines of Albury are to be sold in Victoria without paying duty, why not equally the wines of the Hunter, why not the wines of Adelaide? Where are we to draw the line, and on what principle?

It would be a sound principle to abolish all duties on intercolonial produce. It is a semi-barbarous plan for the colonists to treat each other as foreigners. Why should an Ovens digger pay no duty on wine grown at the Barrabool Hills, and pay a heavy duty on wine produced by the same vigneron at Albury? Why should the Deniliquin stockman pay a duty on boots made in Melbourne which he would not pay on boots made in Bathurs? Every year draws the colonies closer together in spite of their little jealousies. In some form or other they will have to be united, and it is only fighting their destiny to try and prey upon each other. their destiny to try and prey upon each other. The lines drawn between the various colonies have been spitrary, and there may be more of such lines yet if the policy of separation is to continue. But such boundaries should not affect free internal trade. If they do they necessarily involve a loss. They stop the production of some articles where it would be most convenient to produce them, and divert the natural course of industry. Yet if a free interchange of articles of colonial produce were admitted, it would soon lead to a general Customs Union. And for this very reason it would be desirable as an introductory reason it would be desirable as an introductory step. We are beginning to produce many things from which a large Customs revenue is produced; and if the untaxed internal production rapidly increases, the revenue would be affected by the falling off in the imports. At present the effect would be too slight to be appreciable, but it might in a few years make itself felt. As a temporary measure, intercolonial free trade would be a great improvement but by itself it could not be permanent. ment, but by itself it could not be permanent.

It must be accepted as a step in the direction of a Federal tariff. Judging from the wayward and diverse action of the separate Governments, before we come to a common opinion as to the best mode of taxation. But events are powerful teachers, and under such tuition popular ideas ripen rapidly. The problem will be forced more and more on public attention, and the general thinking will work out the solu tion. Just at present we admit that there are indications calculated to encourage a protec-tionist, but we do not accept them as decisive. The policy of isolation and waste, of jealous localism and perverted industry, will not win the day. The ultimate triumph is reserved for free trade.

INAUGURATION OF THE PRINCE CONSORT'S STATUE.

—The committee, to whom are entrusted the necessary arrangements for the inauguration of the Statue on Monday next, finally agreed to the order of the procession and programme of proceedings vesterday, and we observe that several judicious alterations have been made. For instance, the Volunteer Riffes, instead of bringing up the rear, are to follow immediately after the Volunteer Artillery. Two large stands (to which the public will be admitted on payment of 5s. to one, and 2s. 6d. to the other) are being sected, and they are to accommodate 1600 persons each. It is to be hoped the antiborities will take care that these stands are made sufficiently strong to carry the immense mass of popule who are certain to crowd them on the day. Four amaller stands, or platforms, are also being erected—one for Sir John Young, one for Lady Young and ladies invited by her, one for the Lyster Opera Company, and one for the choir of the German Association. The position in which the cast and west stands have been erected appears to us to be ilj-advised. It may safely be predicted that, if the weather is fine, there will be not less then between thirty and forty thoursed people present, of whom a very small proportion indeed will be able, in consequence of these erections, to see supthing.

FATAL ACCIDENT.—The Oky Coroner will to-day hold an inquest respecting the death of a man, named Samuel Fitzpatrick, who died at his residence, Clarence-street, years to day to the consequence of these ready, from injuries received on Sanday evening by being run over with a horse and cart.

The F. and O. Con's Mall Stramers—The F. and O. Company have ordered the Mongolis back to South-empton without the usual detour to Marseilles, in order to give her immediate dispatch for Indis. The Mongolis is a new serve steamer, of 2799 tons and 500 horse power; is fast, reon y for passengers, carries her ports well open, and will be a valuable addition to the Calcutta and Suer line. The company have provided for the Bombay mail service by framefering the Golconda from the Calcutta to the Ilcombay line. This arrangement will necessitate the Calcutta steamers turning round at Suer for the present. Twe new steamers, the Golcong and Avoca, are fitting out on the Cityés, interded as a reinforcement for the company's esseren lines. Every vaertion is being made to get the former ready for sating by the end of March, and the latter in May. The Orelong is 1504 tons, 250-horse power. The Nivola, 250 horse power is principally intended for cargo work, and is ultimately to be placed on the local China or Japan life that the state of the "Death of Kennedy" we had oling on the subject of the "Death of Kennedy" we had oling on the subject of the "Death of Kennedy" we had oling on the subject of the "Death of Kennedy" we had oling on the subject of the "Death of Kennedy" we had sing on the subject of the subject of the property of the present at the southern extremity of the great hall of the Kennedy" we had sing on the subject of the property of the present at the southern extremity of the present and the calcurate and yet carefully-harmonised finish of all the various vestments, and other accessories, cannot be too highly commended. The picture (twelve fact by eight) hange, for the present, at the southern extremity of the great hall of the Kennedy and the subject of the subj tion: the glee especially, as it was well sung. The recitations were given by members of the society. Mr. Alexander Rea performed the duty of accompanyist. The National Anthem, sung by the choir, terminated the evening's proceedings.

St. Michael's Schools' Excussion.—The scholars connected with St. Michael's Day and Sabbath Schools visited Middle Harbour yesterday, where they held their annual festival. A large number of the congregation attending the church were also present, and a very pleasant day was spent by all. The children upon landing commenced a variety of games, such as cricket, rounders, football, &c., and being regarded with a plentiful supply of edities during the day, they seemed; quite happy. The Breadalbane, which was engaged for the trip, returned at about dusk, landing her weary freight without socident.

The Overa.—Although to the bulk of the public Weber's Der Freischuta is locked upon as chiefly attractive on account of its spectacular effects, it really contains some exquisite music of the pure German school, such for instance as the beatiful dues between Anne and Agatha in the first act, or the liner trie in the first scene of the second act, both of which were last high sung, with considerable taste. The open went very smoothly from first to leat, and some portions of it merited great praise. Mide, Durand's Agatha is the best character she has ever appeared in here. Mr. Beaumont's Max was also meritorioth. The scenic accessories were very fine, especially the "incantation scene," the wird effect of which would have been heightened had there been less light in the background. Norms will be produced to-night.

SPETCH-NIGHT OF MR. T. P. HILL's PUPILS.—Yesterday evening was a speech-night for the pupils of Mr. T. P. Hill, at the Australian Library, in Beat-street. There was a large, well-pleased audisnoe, by whom the proficiency of the young lads in the study of the art of elecution, under the cateform of the coloration of which he recited with much feeling a little peen descriptive of the

The entertainment was concluded shortly after ten o'clock.

Realtes for St. Gloroff's Day.—Mr. S. Goddard, the engraver, of Firit-entert North, has prepared for the inauguration of Frince Albert's Statue on St. George's Day.—Monday, the 23rd instant—a series of rossites on silk ribbon, on which are engraved three appropriate designs in honour of the occasion. St. George, engaged in that contest with the Dragon with which his name is generally associated, appears on the button of the resette, and on the two dependent ends are the arms of the widowed Quen, a medallism of her Mest Gracious Majesty, and a small sketch of the statue which has been raised anamquet us in honour of the late Prince Albert. The rosettee are made of different colours, to suit the taste and fancy of the different friendly societies.

DEATH OF W. D. BERNARD, D. C. G.—We take the following from the Colombo Advertiser of the 24th February:— The mail has brought intelligence of the death of Mr. W. D. Bernard, Deputy Commissary-General, who left Ceylon in a very precarious state of health in December. Mr. Bernard died, we understand, a few hours after the braneward steamer reached Malta; and his case is one where, humanly speaking, life might have been prolonged had he followed the advice of friends, and returned home long before he could make up his mind to do so. Mr. Bernard's career was a singularly varied and active one, during which he had lived in different parts of the world. At one time proprietor of a great part of the land on which and he followed the advice of friends, and returned home long before he could make up his mind to do so. Mr. Bernard's career was a singularly varied and active one, during which he had lived in different parts of the world. At one time proprietor of a great part of the land on which Melbeurne now stands, he sold out just in time to miss the chance of securing a fortune. Afterwards, as surgeon on board H. M. S. Nemisis, he saw service in the first Chinase war, and wrote an account of the expection, which attracted some attention at the time. As Lord Torrington's private secretary bees, Mr. Bernard did not shine very buildiantly; but subsequently he did good service in his post of Deputy Commissary-General. Mr. Bernard was a man of no ordinary attainments, of keen observation, and extensive reading, and many will miss an esteemed friend."

An Awa waad Fix.—A curious occurrence in connexion with the cristinal courts occurred at Hebert Town, when the Supreme Court had to wait for the action of the Police Court. The Learneston Exemiser way:—"In the Hobert Town Supreme Court, on Thursday, Charles-Gladhill, charged with being accessary to the casting away of the schooner Blanche, was called, but idd not appear. Afterwards it transpired that Gladhill, though he had been committed at Lail, had been apprehended the previous evening and lodged in the watchhouse; and that the Court would have to wait until the estipendiary magistrate had released him. His Honor Sit F. Smith said this was assomations."

Ter Sanson.—On Menday woming, rather unexpectedly, showers of rain began fulling, and they fell at intervals of short duration. The unessesomable hosts of several days previously, in the middle of the day, led many to suppose that when rain commenced it would be continuous; but only a few alight chowers have fallon since Tuesday morning.—Maitland Mercury, April 19.

Joseph V. Titternon.

Plaintiff claimed £28 for board and lodging, &c. Defeedant, his wife, and their child, stayed at a public-house kept by the plaintiff, Messe Joseph, on two separate occasione, in November and December of the year 1865. The claim was for five weeks' board, &c., at £5; money lent, £7 los.; and 10s. liquor supplied. Plaintiff's wife, her child, and servant, lived with delendant's mether-in-law, at Penrith, for twelve or thirteen days prior to defendant's coming to Sydney. Mr. Joseph paid nothing for the board and lodging at Penrith, and as defendant alleged it was on her invitation then gives to Mêvs. Titterion that defendant and his wife came to Joseph's. Mrs. Joseph denied that she had given the invitation, and plaintiff's case was, that defendants came to his house as arrangers. Joseph staying when she was at Penrith; but on this point he was stated that defendant had offered to pay £20 if plaintiff was stated that defendant had offered to pay £20 if plaintiff would discontinue the present suit, and on the other that plaintiff had said that the amount of defendant's indebtedners was only £5. It was controded for the defundant that Mrs. Titierton's board should not be charged for, and that the present action with respect to that of her husband's was dispareful. There was some dispute as to the number of days defendants were lodging at Joseph's. Verdict for the plaintiff £18, in addition to the sum of £2 10s, which had been paid into Court.

Mr. Salemons, instructed by Mr. Levey, appeared for plaintiff, and Mr. Stephen, instructed by Mr. Driver, for defendant.

SIR.—In reply to lotter in your issue of this day, signed "From Hoktitha Teo." who comes forth as the champion of "energetic men uch absee built full, equipped atsamships," &c., &c., as if the owners of a local steamship were not as energetic as those who divide their Colonial profits in the mother country—I would condescend to inform him that the gold was not taken at a reduction of a halfpenny per ounce; and that if it had been there would still be no necessity for your correspondent to be so anxious after the internate of "our friends the proprietory of the Bank of Nece Scath Weles." as that Company is quite capable of hooking after its own interests without thelphoneft of his assistance; although, perhaps, he may be meditating an overdraft,—if so, I wish him joy; and, at same time, to allay his fears for the public good, I may state that the Barwon's owners are quite as capable of making good a g-'dl or any other loss. although, pernaps, as may so measures as observed in so, I wish him joy; and, at same time, to allay his fears for the public good, I may state that the Berwon's owners are quite as caspeble of making good a gold or any other loss, for which they may be proved liable, as is the Company owning the Tarrua, and for which I think your correspondent pleads more than for public interest, which he knows cares as little for him as he does for it.

Before classing, I would take this opportunity of saying that ever since the Berwon was in the New Zoaland trade to the present time, we have been running in perfect accord with the P. N. Z. and A. R. M. Company, and see no reason why it should be otherwise for the future.

Sin,—Would you allow me space just to answer your correspondent signed. "Volunteer," relative to the Volunteers place in the procession, on the 23rd. If he looks through the programme he will find it is (to use a military phrase), like an advanced and rear guard; the military or Queen's rooss being in frost, and the Volunteers and Naval Brigade bringings up the rar, and I think (for I am not in the confidence of the semmittee), they thought it was the post of honour. But putting all that on one side, what could "Volunteer" say or do if the place was invaded to morrow, if he cavilled at all orders given him, or what would the force be in itself! Obedience, Sir, is the first duty of the volunteer as it is of the soldier, and I am sure he is too good a volunteer not to see that every one cannot command and not one to obey.

If you are a Captain,
And I am a Captain,
Then who is to pull the boat ahore.

By inserting these few lines I am sure that "Volunteer" will see that he has the post of henour, and not insulted, as he seems to think.

Yours truly. To the Editor of the Herald

THE AUSTRALIAN JOINT STOCK BANK.

In the comparative view of the bank returns for the quarters ended 31st December 1864 and 1865, published in our impression of the 3rd ultimo, it was assumed that in all cases the returns of each quarter comprised only the transactions within the col...y of New South Wales. We are now given to understand that as regards the Australian Joint Stock Bank there was this difference, that the return for the fourth quarter of 1864 included the transactions of the branch in the colony of Queenland, while the return for the corresponding period of 1865 included the transactions of New South Wales only. The comparison was therefore obviously unfair, and as we have been furnished with the dintinctive figures for December 1864, we subjoin a currected view of the two periods.

Messra. Law, Sommer, and Co., of Pitt-street, Sydney, bave forwarded for exhibition a fine collection of valuable prass receds, which to farmers and graziers are of considerable interest, and yesterday received much attention from them.

Of maize there was a splendid show, both as regards the quality of the grain and the number of exhibits. The varieties shown were numerous. The maisona corn for its bread-making projecties especially deserve notice. Mr. J. I. I. Mitchell, of Dunmors, was the only exhibitor in this class, but the maizena was considered so good that the prize was awarded to him. He also showed some maizena flour, and breed made from it.

The competition in the show of silk far surpassed that of last year in the number of exhibits—twelve samples having been sent in, whilst the quality was pronounced by the guntlemen who were appointed to judge in this class, to be inst-trate. Close to the silk a few vases of skeleton leaves were exhibited by Mrs. Tribe. We recently noticed a vase of three which was shown to us, and need only add that those exhibited even surpass them in beauty of selection and arrar general of the leaves. A frame, exhibiting the leaves in their natural state, with others in a skeleton form, is placed beside the vases.

The show of plants and flowers was very good, but the sesciation would do well to offer separate prizes for variegated plants and plants in flowers. The variegated plants were very beautiful, especially the one named the Genn. The collections of cut flowers did not contain many varieties; the dahlias and salvias were good, but very little taste was displayed in making up the bouquets. A very beautiful vase of was flowers was exhibited by Mrs. Phelan, and was scholined by all the visitors.

SATIRE AND THE RAIL.—Satire, to be thoroughly appreciated, requires a small and select circle, of which every member is dependent upon the respect of the others. If the victim of Horace or Juvenal could have ordered out his litter, arrived at Athens, and entered a fresh society all in a few hours, the joke would have been carried away along with his travelling equipage. If there had not been courtiers like Racine, to be literally slain by a look of the Greaking, we should have been still in want of Boileau and Molière. If the object of attack had not been tidd as it were to a tree, round which indeed he might move, but from which he could not be altogether loosed, the quiver of the archer would have been filled with far more darts than he could ever hope to exhaust; and in default of the noble game of man, he would, like the late givers of shows in the Roman amphitheatres, have had to put up with creatures for whom a headless dart might suffice.—The Reader.

THE SHENANDOAN

(From the Saturd y Review, ebra:ry 17.) THE correspondence just published on the cas of the Shenandoah is the most interesting of the whole series of documents produced by ou differences and discussions with the United States during the late American war. We have reached now the term of discussion, as the disputants own they cannot go further without saying things that ought not to be said if peac is to be maintained. Mr. Seward, on the 30th of last November, wrote a despatch which was crouched in language as offensive to the English Government as any language could be that should be not wholly inconsistent with the maintenance of friendly relations. "It would have gratified the President," he writes, "if her Majesty's Government had caused proceedings to be instituted for the condemnation of the Shenandoah. The course, however, which the British Government has hitherto purwhich the British Government has hitherto pur-sued in regard to our applications for justice was such as to discourage, on our part, an expectation of the disposition of the vessel. We accept her now, simply and exclusively, upon the prudential consideration that, being reduced into our possession, she will not again depart from British waters in a hostile cha-And as to the conduct of the English Government with regard to the Shenandoah Mr. Seward, in language even still stronger, remarks that "the United States regret they are unable to draw any other inference than the painful one that her Majesty's Government have assumed to hold guiltless of all crime subjects of her Majesty who have, in a time of profound peace, waged naval war upon the high seas against unarmed citizens of the United States, engaged in lawful commerce and Mr. Adams was instructed to read the despatch as a protest against these proceedings. He did as he was bid, and very naturally Lord Clarendon was exceedingly angry. There was something very aggravating in being told that England was so hopelessly and wilfully unjust, and so utterly past all argu-There was something very aggravating ment and right reason, that even when she gave a ship up, the ship was received not as rightly delivered, or as an earnest of good intentions, but in order that this particular ship might be kept from doing the wrong which English ships generally were encouraged by the English Government to do. Lord Clarendon to'd Mr. Adams that his sincere desire to do and say nothing that could impair our friendly relatio replying to the despatch at once in the terms he thought it deserved. Undoubted! Mr. Seward's despatch was written with much acrimony, and with a peevish license of language that was unworthy of his position, and Lord Clarendon took the wisest course in declining to enter into arguments and examine decining to enter into arguments and examine assertions put forward in so uncourteous a manner. But when this is admitted, the main question remains whether the course which our Government adopted with regard to the Shenandoah was the right one; and, in pronouncing an opinion on this point, we ought not to allow any irritation which Mr. Seward's despatch may produce to influence us in the least. The responsibility which the Government ought to sponsibility which the Government ought to infringing neutrality, and the amount and kind of control it ought to exercise over such persons, are subjects far toe momentous to allow u to suffer any but the widest principles of justice and expediency to guide our decision. Technically, and as a matter of mere law, the conduct of the English Government appears to us to have been throughout justifiable. We do not see any point as to which it can be said that our Government that the said that our dovernment that the said that four dovernment are said that the said that the said that said itself. The Shenandoah was a British ship called the Sea King, engaged in the regular Bombay trade. Sea King, engaged in the regular Bombay trade. and carried no armament except two small guns, such as merchant vessels of her size, and with her destination, ordinarily carry. In fact, when she passed into the service of the Confederates, her new commander, in engaging his crew, told them that, as they could see from the vessel itself, he did not mean to fight, and would have nothing to do with men-of-war except to try to get away from them. The Government could get away from them. The Government could not possibly have prevented such a ship from sailing when she pleased. Off Madeira, she met her colleague, the Laurel, also from Liverpool, laden with arms; and the Laurel had just as much right to leave Liverpool with a cargo of arms as any of the numerous vessels that sailed with cargoes of arms for New York. Off Madeira, but on the high seas, the Sea King was sold to the Confederate agents. Captain Waddell produced his commission, and Captain Waddell produced his commission, and began to enlist such of the crew of the two vessels as he could persuade to enter the Con-federate service. Captain Corbett, who commanded the Sea King, was ultimately prosecuted by our Government for his share of the proceed. ings; but there was no evidence to show that he had, while in Great Britain, infringed the Foreign Enlistment Act. He had a right to sell a ship to a belligerent at sea, and he was not bound—and, in fact, had no power—to prevent his crew enlisting in the service of that belligerent. Subsequently the Sea King, under the new name of the Shenandoah, went to Melbourne, and an account of what happened there have been deray up he consed there has been drawn up by one of her crew, named Temple, who since her arrival in Liverpool has furnished the United States authorities with an account of her proceedings. If his account is read by itself, the Melbourne authorities rities would seem to have behaved with dis-graceful partiality to a Confederate vessel, to have placed themselves and their resources at the disposal of the Confederate commander, and to have joined in what is called an ovation to Captain Waddell and his staff. Fortunately however, the Blue-book in which Temple statement is set out also contains a long series of extracts from the newspapers of Victoria, published during the stay there of the Shenandoah. The extracts are so numerous series The extracts are so numerous, and are taken from so many different journals, as to leave little doubt that the information given by Temple is very far from correct. The Melbourne authorities, far from welcoming the Shenan doah, gave her as unfavourable a reception a was consistent with admitting her at all on the basis of a man of war belonging to a recognised belligerent. She was even detained for some time on the slips where she was being repaired she was forced to give up four seamen that had enlisted on her, and she was only allowed to sail on the captain's giving his word of honour that there were no other sailors on board who had joined her since her arrival in Victoria.

That the Melbourne authorities were quite right to receive her there can be no doubt. ngnt to receive her there can be no doubt. It might be a salutary change in the law to lay down that no belligerent vessel should be received in the ports of a neutral unless she could show that she had originally sailed from a port belonging to that belligerent. But this is not the law as it stands, and has never been acted on by any country. The Shenandoah left

Melbourne, went towards Behring Straits, captured crowds of unfortunate whalers, and was ultimately brought into Liverpool. Her captain immediately placed her at the disposal of the English Government, for surrender to the authorities of the United States. The surrender was accepted, and Mr. Adams ventured to say that the promptitude with which the English acted would meet with the warm approbation of his Government. The warmth approbation of his Government. The warmin of the approbation may be gathered from the terms which Mr. Seward used in speaking of the acceptance of this ship. The Government of the United States could not undo the work of its own agents, but it undoubtedly regretted that the surrender was accepted. For it is beyond dispute that to accept the ship was to recognise that she had belonged to the Confederates, and thus to cut away from the Americans their favourite argument that the ship had been throughout British. The Eng-lish Government had, however, to deal not lish Government had, however, to deal not only with the ship, but with her captain and her crew. The authorities of the United States contend that Captain Waddell ought to have been indicted for piracy. The answer of the English Government is, that if he had been charged with piracy he must have been taken at once before a magistrate, and that unless some evidence of piracy had been given the magistrate must have released him at once. But the English Govern-ment had no evidence whatever that Captain Waddell had captured American ships after he knew that the war was over; and Lord Clarendon very properly points out that the English Government could not have lowered itself to try to get out the only evidence which the Americans can suggest might have been forthcoming
—the evidence of men like Temple, who might have been willing to give testimony against their

But, the Americans urge, if they could not have been successfully indicted for piracy, they might have been prosecuted for a breach of the Foreign Enlistment Act, in enlisting in the Confederate service when they were either British subjects or sufficiently domiciled here to be amenable to British law. As to the latter head, it would be going very far indeed to be amenable to British law. As to the latter head, it would be going very far indeed to say that foreigners residing in England who chose to fight on the side of one or other belligerent ought to be prosecuted; for, undoubtedly, the first example ought in that case to be made of the Count of Paris and his brother. As to British subjects, it is perhaps doubtful whether any one on board had committed an offence against the Act; but at any rate the crew of the Shenandoah had done no more than the crowds of Irish who went over to take the bounty at New York. Still, if the account given of the behaviour of Captain Paynter of the Donegal, which Temple furnished, is true the mode in which the crew of the Shenandoal was released was open to exception. According to Temple, Captain Paynter said, "I am come to release you"; and he then asked the nationality of every one present. The word had been passed round that every British subject should say he was a Southerner. Captain Paynter took the statements as they were given, informed the Government that were no British subjects on board. This, if true, was a mere triffing with the forms of law, and had the air of the British Government conniving in a transparent evasion of its own laws. But Temple's account is oper to many suspicions, more especially as it was connect to the agents of the United States after he thought that he had been wronged, because, although some of the sailors had received their full pay after arriving at Liverpool, he had not. Even, however, if Captain Paynter was indiscreet, this does not at all prove that the Government had any evidence on which to proscepte the sailors or a verse. on which to prosecute the sailors, or any to single them out from all the large number persons who chose to enlist on either side and, in nine instances out of ten, on the Federal side—in the late civil war. We do not, therefore, see where, in strict law, our Government is to be blamed for anything it did in the case of the Shenan doah; and, therefore, if it was wrong at all, it was wrong only in the way in which Mr. Adams asserts it to have mainly erred, that is, in not having enacted fresh laws that would have checked the course of such vessels as the Shen andoah. Whether this would have been possible or wise is a very large and difficult ques-tion. What is certain is, that we might now, in concert with the United States and France, in concert with the Contest State against aiding lay down as stringent a code against aiding belligerents as neutrals could in practice find tolerable. But, unhappily, the tone in which Mr. Seward now writes precludes all hope of so desirable a termination of the discussion.

HOW TO PACIFY IRELAND.

(From the Saturday Review, February 17.)

No reasonable being needs to be told that Queen Victoria is, beyond question, the most popular sovereign that ever reigned over these islands. One or two of her predecessors may have produced short, momentary bursts of greater enthusiasm; but for deep, quiet respect and love, felt in all classes and conditions, none of our former rulers can compare with the pre-sent Queen. Now, this is undoubtedly loyalty of a very sincere and beautiful form. But is it the loyalty which was felt for the Stuarts? Is it the loyalty which led the poor Highlanders to follow an unknown and untried young prince through endless difficulties and dangers, to be finally butchered at Culloden? In a word, is the popularity per-sonal or dynastic? Does it belong to the Queen herself, or to the illustrious house represented in her person? Upon the proper answers to these questions grave issues depend—graver than, in our fat contentment and prosperity, we are apt to suppose. In consequence of the attractive and pose. In consequence of the attractive and exceptional virtues of the reigning sovereign, a whole generation has acquired the attitude and language of a loyalty which it is quite and language of a loyalty which it is quite possible might be exchanged for something very different were those virtues conspicuous only by their absence in another occupant of the throne. We are constantly being told that these islands have never been so loyal as they are at this moment; and nothing can be truer, if by loyalty is meant respect and attachment to Queen Victoria. But a misconception is in these circumstances very possible; nay, we believe, is actually very often entertained. Does any one believe that the menarchical principle is more esteemed now than formerly. The personal representative of that principle receives on all hands unbounded honour honour as merited as it is unbounded; but may we hence conclude that the principle itself may we nence conclude that the principle itself is honoured in the same degree? The distinction is very great, and its importance cannot be exaggerated. Noisy protestations of a rather boisterous loyalty, such as are of daily occurrence, are apt to mislead, not because they are necessarily insincere, but because it is obvious that they confound an individual with an office vehement recoil of popular feeling, and even possible hostility to that office, should it at future time be less admirably filled. any one conjecture what would now be the language of the Radical and revolutionary Press instead of a virtuous woman of cultivated mind and exemplary life, a George IV. were seated on the throne. Let any one remember or read of the state of public opinion during the Regency, and inquire, should anything similar ever again occur, whether, with the rush and ever again occur, whether, with the rush and momentum now acquired by popular and liberal views, an explosion altogether unprecedented might not very probably be the result. And supposing that matters stopped much short of any such untoward consummation, is it not presumable that in any case the transition from a Queen to a King will be most trying? Many prosperous Briton, we fancy, whose bosom under present circumstances is ready at any moment to well with the most gushing loyalty, would exentiments and emotions were he to witness only a few of the most ordinary of royal vagarie the person of a male Sovereign.

We confess that the above train of thought was not entirely absent from our minds when we read a paragraph which appeared in the Times of February the 2ad. We there read that "His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales arrived at Windsor on Wednesday evening, by the 7.10 ordinary train, on the Great Western Railway, having travelled direct from Sandring-ham, attended by Major Grey, for the last day of pheasant shooting in Windsor Great Park." We were further told that the royal shooting party bagged 137 pheasants, 494 rabbits, I partridge, woodcock, and that " the Prince has shot this eason upwards of 26,000 head of game. in no European nation is a taste for field sports A simple, unsophisticated, almost boyish delight is taken in all the accessories involved in the pursuit of game—in the fresh open air, in the hard muscular exercise, in the cleverness and sagacity of the dogs. Shooting with us is its own exceeding great reward. We do not follow it for the sake of victuals, like the Esquimaux; nor for the sake of putting on a fancy costume fearfully and wonderfully made, as is occa-sionally done in certain foreign parts. To see our Princes share and delight in a strong national taste cannot be otherwise than gratify ing to Englishmen. Nothing creates a readier bond of sympathy and mutual understanding than a community of amusements. You may do business with a man, and know all the time he is your enemy; but it is not easy to have a bit of fun any one whom you cordially dislike. say, therefore, that it is a source of pleasure to a large section of the public merely to hear of the Prince following the hounds, or shooting grouse in Scotland and pheasants in Windsor. The more our Princes share our tastes the more we like them, and we trust the more they will we like them, and we trust the more they will like us. But est modus in rebus. If the figures in the above quotation are correctly given, his Royal Highness must have shot upwards of 150 head of game every day, Sundays included, for the last five months. We are far from objecting to this, though it is searcely in accordance with our notions of sport; but we may at least ask now. notions of sport; but we may at least ask, now that the shooting season is over, whether it is not possible, by an easy effort, to do something even more calculated to secure the affection and admiration of the country. The Prince has hitherto shown not only such a desire, but such a capacity of imitating the example of his illustrious parents in the punctual discharge of every obligation and duty appertaining to his station, that the public would receive with extreme regret even a hint of a change in this respect. Vague and unstimulating as this respect. Vague and unstimulating as are the duties of an heir-apparent to the British Crown. he had had in his own capurience, one striking example of the good which it is in his power to effect. It is acknowledged on all hands that his visit to solidly beneficial results. How much of the loyalty of the colony, where it smouldered before, burst out into a steady flame at the approach of the eldest son of the Queen of England! The gala trip saved us probably the cost of transporting a good many regiments in the troubled epoch which has since intervened. An analogous effect was produced by the Prince's visit to the United States, and no one can doubt that, but for the calamitous civil war, a new era of international amity was approaching for England and America. It is impossible to think of these happy past events with-out being mournfully reminded of the present. An Irish member, on the first night of the session, complained that his country had been so rarely visited by the Royal Family and had received so little attenfounded. It is well known that whatever may capacity of personal attachment is not one. It is well known that devotion to a chief or leader marked a trait in their nature that they will, faute de mieux, fabricate, out of the first adventurer that offers, an object of almost reli-gious veneration. Beyond almost any race preglous veneration. Beyond almost any race pre-tending to civilisation, they are open to personal influence and kindness, and indifferent to abstract principles and cold passionless justice. But the method has been to give them nothing but principles— and those far enough from the best— and withhold to the uttermost that personal influence to which they are so susceptible. Since the accession of George I. the time spent by the Princes of the House of Hanover in the sister island might conveniently be reckoned by days, we had almost said by hours. The sad result is only too evident. A few weeks, spent in the autumn by one or more of our Royal family, and particularly by the Prince of wales, among the poor misguided but truly warm-hearted Paddies, would do more for the sister country than fifty debates in Parliament and a score of constitutional measures. Could not the Prince spare those few weeks before, or from, the next shooting season? What he did autumn season which should present the grand total of 26,000 Irish hearts won from treason and disaffection to loyalty and self-respect would be a triumph to the Heir of England more enduring and more satisfactory, both to the country and himself, than the remembrance of that vast bag of fur and feathers which courtly newsmen consider so wonderful and creditable. (From the Manchester Examiner, February 21.)

Bur Irishmen are expected, above all things, to be loyal to their Sovereign, and it must be confessed they do not often get the chance of even seeing her. From 1690 to 1821, some hundred and thirty years, the Sovereign never once set foot on the Irish shores. Almost down to our own times the Irish never saw but one monarch, and that was one who crossed the Boyne at the head of an army to overthrow their Church and one of the most certain results of which confusion would mest probably be a sudden and From 1821 till now there have been five Royal in Canada was productive of the best effects

Is there any reason why a visit to Ireland should not have the same happy results? An autumn season which should present the grand visits to Ireland, at the rate of one every ten years, an improvement upon the past, but still an impolitic niggardliness of Royal favour. If the Queen had a Balmoral at Killarney, and spent a month or two every year in that delight-ful district, her Irish subjects would undoubt-edly receive her with enthusiasm, and loyalty would tend to become habitual. If the Queen set the example, she would also set the fashion, and thousands who can travel and spend money would acquire a knowledge of their fellow-subjects which would be useful on both sides. These are very small matters undoubtedly, but they have a weight which it is unwise to undervalue. We are apt to forget how much the world is swayed by little things, and it is worthy of the smallest as well as of the largest effort to win the hearts, not less than to promote the interests, of our Irish brethren. Justice to Ireland by all means, but let us give along with it, and in advance of it, gifts which a generous and warm-hearted people value still more highly —respect, courtesy, and affection.

A INT GEORGE'S DAY.

THE OLD HOUSE IN PARK-STEET OUT

FOR A HOLIDAY.

Out for a holiday, out for a spree,
Be it on the land, or be it on the sea;
No matter. So banished be every care,
The light heart breeds happiness everywhere,
And he who hash leisure this day to regime

With our cat and dog is most welcome to dine;
(For Topey and Carlo—ment being so dear—
Have dined off beefsteaks since the first of the year).
Three hundred days spent in like's wear and tear
(With fifty-two Sundays devoted to prayer)
Leaves thriteen days open it nike's waste to repair,
And relieve the sad heart of a whole year of care,
Four Saints have now, happily, put in a claim
Their days to be honour'd fer past deeds of fame.
To St. Patrick every honour was paid;
Not so to St. David, I'm sorry afraid.
St. Andrew is safe, when it comes to his time,
But another Saint just now cangages my rhyme—
My own country's Saint; then raise high the fiagon While we teast all the Saints, and St. George and the

TARRINA.—The sale of this highly esteemed article of Sydney.

ROCHE'S HERBAL EMBROCATION, FOR THE HOOPING COUGH.—This is the only discovery affording a perfect cure without administering internal medicine, the difficulty and inconvenience of which, in all disorders particularly incident to children, are too well known to need any comment. The inventor and proprietar of this Embrecation can with pleasure and satisfaction declare, that its salutary effects have been so universally experienced, and so generally acknowledged, that many of the most emisent of the faculty now constantly recommend it as the only known safe and perfect cure, without restriction of diet or use of medicine.

For the protection of the public, and to prevent imposition, "J. ROCHE" is signed on the label accompanying each bettle, and the name of the sole wholesale agent, Mr. EDWARDS, SS, Old Change, late of 67, St. Paul'a, engraved on the Government stamp. Price is per bottle. Sold by most respectable chemists.

HOLLOWAY'S FILLS and OINTMENT.—Confidence. The most implicit reliance may be placed on these remedics. No invalid, after a fair trial, has found them fail to relieve the pain or completely cure the disease. Sold at 244. Strand, London, and at all druggiets throughout the world.
